Value of Farm Crops Shows

These previous Farm Crops Shows have been held in Crookston, indicating what the Minnesota Red River Valley is capable of producing. This section is known as the bread basket of the state, and it is expected that a great deal of the produce marketed here will be sent to the cities of the state. The shows have been a great success, and it is expected that they will be even more successful this year.

FIRST SHOW IN 1910

The first Farm Crops Show was held at the Crookston School of Agriculture in 1910, and this paved the way for future exhibitions. The start was modest, the quarters were cramped, but the possibilities for such events in the future were plainly shown. The next show was held at the same place, and showed such a growth in every department, that last year it was necessary to hold the show in the largest rooms available in Crookston, which proved entirely inadequate to meet the requirements.

This year, therefore, the great show is to be given under the auspices of the Minnesota Red River Valley Development Association, and to locate it, Crookston's splendid new armory building has been secured, with a main floor space of 500 feet. In addition to this, there is a gymnasium and other rooms in the basement together with a gallery and two commodious waiting rooms on the first floor. It is expected that every foot of the available space will be necessary to house the show.

The committee comprising the association includes: C. E. Barber, Herman, Mahoneus, P. F. Red Lake, Prinzlup, Marshall, Kittson and Roseau, and the farmers and business men of these ten counties, whose wealth is equalled, have a great opportunity—and are sure to exhibit their connection with the coming Farm Crops Show.
